"From that day on I go to each door in turn and sing the three songs that I remember from school. Within a few days I'm overwhelmed how happy they appear to be when they hear or recognize me." – Corinne Hofmann, The White Masai tags: africa, friendship, love, missionary-hospital, service-to-others

Corinne Hofmann (Author of The White Masai)

As a white woman, who grew up in Japan, lived in India, Kyrgyzstan – I'd say the author bravely immersed herself into the culture, and did it successfully than most of the people I know; in fact, more than most of the harsh critics of her character ever did. She was naive, she was infatuated.
